

Finding a Property in France

If you are thinking of buying a house in France for use as a home or gite, there are many ways of seeking your ideal property. Below you will find some suggestions, together with a detailed section on the buying process itself.

Before you even begin to look for a house, define exactly what you are looking for or need in a property. For example, how many bedrooms will you need; are you looking for sizeable land; whether a garage or carport is a requirement; size and condition of any outbuildings; and don't forget to define the region and the price you are able to afford - there is no point in falling in love with a property you can't afford!

Magazines:

There are many magazines available that you can purchase that will give you a good deal of information on the various areas of France that you may be interested in. Magazines such as this usually advertise properties by area and price, so you have the opportunity of beginning to define your search criteria. They also include interesting articles on some of the regions of France, and the experiences of people who have bought properties in France.

To read the rest of this Fact Sheet, please download the whole document